We all want to be happy, but something always gets in the way. There is never enough time or money. Somebody is always failing to do what he or she is supposed to do. Our parents, friends, and teachers aren't doing it right. They failed us. We are angry, and we have a right to be angry. But is that anger making us happy? Happiness is not something anyone else can give us or take away from us. Happiness is what we make of our lives or don't. Whatever our circumstances, we can create a joyful life or a miserable one. It is up to us.

- ① It is important that nobody disappoints you.
- ② Everybody has a right to be angry.
- ③ Circumstances influence how happy you are.
- ④ Only you can make yourself happy.

The principles of European integration like free competition or free movement of goods and capital will promote a free market economy in countries such as Albania, Bosnia and Serbia in East Europe. The removal of custom barriers will enable producers to cut production costs, which will result in export increases. It will create new jobs and bring new technologies into European industry and trade. Therefore, the EU should be willing to open its door to these three countries as soon as possible. It will be also good for the EU. That's because the more membership countries the EU has, the more powerfully and effectively it will do its job.

As a police officer, I have often been asked: "What is the best thing about your job?" With so many police interactions with the public being so negative, special things happen sometimes that truly raise our spirits. (㉠), in August 2015, a man told me that a family seemed to have fallen on hard times and was driving around on bald tires. My initial thought was that he wanted us to do something to stop them. (㉡), he had arranged for a tire dealer to fit four new tires to their car and paid $800 for it. He wanted to do this in secret. All he wanted the police to do was to get the family to accept the help and keep his name out of it.

Although every forensic case is different, each case goes through many of same phases. Each phase requires its own procedures and expertise. Throughout each phase, the chain of evidence must remain intact. The first phase is usually the discovery of the case. More likely than not, discovery is made by accident. The second phase is recovery of the remains and evidence. This and future phases require professional help. Next, laboratory analysis and research on the remains and evidence proceed. At some point, all of the data from the different labs and investigators comes together and is synthesized into the case report. Although changes may be made, this synthesis is the formal interpretation of the data and provides the most logical explanation or reconstruction of the events and the identification of the remains.

In the midst of the fall election campaign in 2012, there was a trial for one of the most horrific murder cases in memory. The murder case was the sort of crime that could increase support for the death penalty. No wonder it was said that the trial would affect the governor's race, because it set a supporter of capital punishment against an opponent. Considering the event, it would seem a tough case to make, but the opponent of the death penalty won. That's just one of the many indications that capital punishment is becoming less popular. Executions have fallen by half since 1999. The number of new death sentences is about one-third of what it was at its 1996 peak.

To change, you must let go of what you have now. You leave something behind. Change always involves risk because it always begins with loss. Such loss is usually experienced as a threat and therefore a risk. The "Letting Go" phase of change involves losses which can range from giving up the security of a routine task to losing meaningful long-term work. However, change may be the opportunity. It may not be obvious or immediate. It may be as subtle as the chance to learn something new. Furthermore, it may involve taking on more responsibility which later opens new doors. Change might make you a more mature person.
